SCHOLA
CANTORUM OF OXFORD

“ Remaking my will has made me think about institutions and organisations that have been critical to my life. Without doubt, one of these has been Schola Cantorum – or Collegium Musicum Oxoniense (CMO) as it was in the early 1960s when I joined the choir. László Heltay, founding director, was an inspiration: for his personal story as a 1956 Hungarian refugee; for his ability to communicate with singers through his minimalist and precise style of conducting; and for providing the unprecedented opportunity in the University at that time for female – as well as male – students to join an outstanding a cappella choir.

Commitment was absolute and one never missed a rehearsal. For László’s expectations were so rewarding. He expected us to sing confidently in other languages, not least Hungarian where our copies of works by Kodaly and Bardos were marked up with our versions of the complex pronunciation. He led us on memorable European adventures starting, for me, with a choir tour of eight German cities. In June 1964, he had us singing the Symphony of Psalms in the Oxford Town Hall under the baton of the 82-year old Igor Stravinsky. Such experiences were bonding stuff. I met my husband in the choir as well as our oldest friends who also married as a result of meeting in the choir. The experience gave us a lifelong appreciation of all aspects of choral singing.

Over 30 years later, as a Trustee, I often pondered about the spirit of the choir. It grew out of this remarkable beginning under Heltay and has gathered momentum across the decades, due to the commitment of its professional conductors, of successive student singers, and of all those involved in its organisation including the chairs and student officers. We all admire those former members who have reached the highest levels of professional choral music.

Schola’s long-standing reputation is such that it now deserves serious, on-going support, not least from its former members, some of whom can do more in a bequest than during their lifetimes. I am very proud, as an early beneficiary of this spirit to do so and hope to set the ball rolling... **”
